

Genre catalogue methodology

A controlled extension of the first GENRES tab: recognizable, independently documented music genres; consistent genealogy and origin fields; and no changes to the protected GENRES_orig tab.

Scope guarantee. Classification fields were completed through row 526 and 349 rows were appended at GENRES!B527:J875. Column A remains empty. The full protected range GENRES_orig!A1:AF1000 produced the same checksum before and after the update.

This revision adds a deeper second layer of recognized subgenres and distinctive regional forms while continuing to exclude artist-only tags, aliases, and unstable playlist labels.

1. Selection framework

This correction pass began with 525 genre rows: 414 manually gathered entries plus the first 111-row expansion. Every existing row was reclassified before the second, 349-row expansion was appended.

Inclusion test

- The term identifies a documented musical genre or a stable, widely recognized subgenre - not merely a playlist mood, marketing phrase, local scene name, or a tag attached to one artist.
- The genre has a describable musical identity and a reasonably defensible emergence period and place.
- Recognition was confirmed across source families: a credible overview or genre article, plus a second map, taxonomy, database, or specialist reference whenever the label was potentially ambiguous.
- Regional variants were included only when their music and historical development are distinct enough to justify a separate row. National-language versions alone were excluded.

Depth control

- Major omissions were prioritized first; then recognizable medium-depth subgenres were added where they materially improve coverage.
- Ultra-narrow microgenres, temporary internet coinages, algorithmic clusters, and redundant synonyms were left out.
- Electronic and metal maps were treated as discovery aids, not as automatic authority. Older maps were cross-checked because their coverage and terminology can be dated.

How source evidence was weighted

Tier	Use	Typical evidence
1 - foundation	Identity, lineage, dates, place	Encyclopedias; genre histories; institutional or editorial reference works
2 - structure	Parent/child and adjacent genres	Musicmap, Map of Metal, Ishkur, curated databases
3 - discovery	Candidate generation only	Very broad taxonomies such as Every Noise; rejected unless independently confirmed

Pop was organized by stable styles rather than decades. Decade labels describe eras; rows such as art pop, dance-pop, electropop, indie pop, city pop, Mandopop, and Cantopop describe recognizable musical lineages.

2. Field construction rules

All 874 rows follow the same ten-column schema. No extra parent columns were needed: hybrids use one direct parent plus the secondary area where useful.

Col.	Field	Rule applied
A	Nr.	Left empty exactly as requested.
B	Name	Established display name; accents retained where appropriate; duplicates rejected.
C	Nametech	Lowercase; diacritics removed; spaces, hyphens, punctuation and symbols removed; '&' becomes 'and' before cleanup.
D	Area	Broad primary musical family, aligned with the sheet's vocabulary.
E	Area misc.	Secondary family only when the genre materially spans it - not for a minor influence.
F	Importance	Integer score from 1 to 5, applied to every genre using the rubric below.
G	Parent	Most direct, defensible source genre. '(none)' is used for roots/traditional forms or where one direct parent would be misleading.
H	Decade	Decade in which the genre became a recognizable form or scene.
I	Year	A broad timing cue - early, mid, late, circa, or a representative year - not false precision.
J	Country?	Country where well supported; otherwise a region, paired countries, or worldwide/online origin.

Importance rubric

Score	Meaning
5	Foundational, globally large, or culturally dominant genre family
4	Well-established genre with a substantial scene and durable recognition
3	Recognized medium-size subgenre or strong regional tradition
2	Niche but independently documented style with multiple practitioners
1	Very small or short-lived genre with limited artists, but still documented

Date convention

The date represents the first period in which a genre appears as a stable cluster of releases, artists, or a self-identifying scene. An isolated precursor recording is not treated as the birth of a genre. This mirrors the practical convention used by lineage maps while acknowledging that historical boundaries remain debatable.

3. Judgment calls & validation

Notable decisions

- Juke / Footwork: the question-marked area was resolved to house, with breakbeat as the secondary area and Ghetto House as the parent. Footwork's rhythmic language crosses boundaries, but its direct Chicago lineage is ghetto house.
- Afrobeat vs Afrobeats: both are retained because they are distinct. Afrobeat is the earlier band-based style associated with West African highlife and jazz/funk lineages; Afrobeats is the later umbrella for contemporary West African pop.
- Cumbia: Mexican cumbia and Peruvian cumbia/chicha were included as recognizable, musically differentiated regional forms. 'Cuban cumbia' was not added because independent references did not support it as a comparably established genre label.
- Pop: a core Pop row and selected stable style branches were added. Decade-by-decade 'pop' rows were avoided because those periods do not form a clean parent/child taxonomy.
- Musique concrète: the existing '(none)' treatment was left intact. It is a foundational compositional practice with no single genre parent that fits the sheet's direct-lineage rule.

Duplicate or malformed Nametech keys	None
Missing importance scores	None
Unexpected values in A2:A875	None

Interpretive limit. Genre lineage, exact birth dates, and national origin can be contested. The sheet records the best-supported practical classification, while broad date language and regional labels are used where the evidence does not justify precision.

4. Source register

The following were used as discovery, cross-checking, and historical-reference layers. Individual genre pages within the listed encyclopedic families were consulted for origin and lineage details.

No source was treated as mechanically definitive. Genre classification is strongest where multiple independent descriptions converge; disputed details were represented conservatively in the sheet.
